MODIFYING HEALTH PROMOTION INTERVENTIONS
TO MEET THE NEEDS OF ETHNIC MINORITY GROUPS

Ethnicity and Health Conference

“How to modify health promotion interventions to meet the needs of ethnic minority groups: dissemination of research findings”

Wednesday 2 February, 2011

10:00 am – 4:30 pm

9:30 am - registration & coffee

John McIntyre Conference Centre

18 Holyrood Park Road, EH16 5AY

Edinburgh, United Kingdom

This conference aims to engage potential users of ethnicity health research with findings from our Medical Research Council-funded, multi-method study looking at health promotion interventions which are effective in modifying smoking, physical activity and dietary behaviours in South Asians, Black and Chinese-origin populations. Findings from our systematic overview, systematic review and qualitative interviews will be presented for consideration in the workshops and group discussions.

Conference Chair: Dr. Laurence Guer, Director of Public Health Science, NHS Health Scotland

Workshops:

1. Theoretical considerations: principles of adaptation and behaviour change
2. Methodological reflections on complex systematic reviews
3. Translation of our research findings into practice
4. Translation of our research findings - identifying key future research themes

Workshop Facilitators: Aziz Sheikh, Professor of Primary Care Research and Development, The University of Edinburgh, Raj Bhopal, Professor of Public Health, The University of Edinburgh, Susan Michie, Professor of Health Psychology, University College London, Martin White, Professor of Public Health, Newcastle University, Dr. Ash Samanta, Consultant Rheumatologist, Leicester Royal Infirmary and Chair for the Leicester Centre for Ethnic Health Research Expert Patient Panel, Mark Johnson, Professor of Diversity in Health & Social Care, De Montfort University, and Dr. Gina Netto, School of the Built Environment, Heriot Watt University.
